Article Reflection 1

Dr. Christopher Brown

December 24, 2018

For the first article reflection, we'll be stretching the definition of an article a bit. Watch Professor Hans Rosling's TED talk.

You can read more about Rosling's work in Liberia's ebola outbreak here and more about his life in his obituary. You can find some online versions of the tools used in his TED talk at Gapminder (look for the "Try our new tools" section).

For the reflection,

- Outline the main points in the talk.

- How effective were the graphics are conveying theose points? Give examples of some graphical techniques you found particularly helpful in understanding the main points.

- Near the end of the talk, Professor Rosling suggests that statisticians don't like these graphics, but he notes these are only intended to be "hypothesis-generating". What is he talking about?

Your write-up should be typed, single-spaced, and less than 4 pages in length.
